Katuic Bibliography

Introduction

Katuic is one language group under the Mon-Khmer language branch of the Austroasiatic family of languages. According to Gordon (2005) there are 147 Mon-Khmer languages. The other Mon-Khmer sub-families or linguistic clusters include Aslian, Bahnaric, Khasian, Khmuic, Pearic, Monic, Nicobar, Palaungic, and Viet-Muong, most of which are located in Mainland Southeast Asia. Figure 1 shows the location of Katuic languages.

Figure 2 shows the linguistic clusters in Mon-Khmer without showing some of the intermediate levels given in the Ethnologue (Gordon 2005) such as Eastern Mon-Khmer and Northern Mon-Khmer. The classification of some Mon-Khmer languages (including Mang) is not yet clear, and are not included in this bibliography.

The names for the Katuic languages in this bibliography are based on the Ethnologue (Gordon 2005). This Katuic bibliography lists only materials and literature covering aspects of language, sociolinguistics, ethnography, culture, and anthropology.

The majority of references included here are based on the Southeast Asian Linguistics Archives (SALA) database. References that only contain partial fields of information in the SALA database have been completed with searches from the internet and other resources; otherwise they have been omitted¹ (e.g. references with only titles and authors or without publishing information). One other source is Sidwell's 2008 working list.

The purpose of this Katuic bibliography project is to provide a starting point for research into Katuic languages. It is hoped that the compilation of Katuic literature here will provide suggested readings for background and library research for anyone interested in Katuic languages. This bibliography is part of a broader effort to define the sociolinguistic situation in Mainland Southeast Asia.

Citations are listed in alphabetical order according to author names. The references are formatted closely to LSA standards, but with slight modifications and additions when appropriate². The references have been sorted into categories that reflect their content and subject matter according to their titles and abstracts (whenever available).

This compilation is very much a working document, that is this bibliography should not be considered a finished work. It is expected and hoped that references on Katuic will continue to be added to this bibliography. Please send references or queries to the following email address: marcus_choo@sil.org or SurveyCoord_MSEA@sil.org.

1 Full fields of information are what would be cited as a full bibliographic reference according to the Linguistic Society of America (LSA). Exceptions with regards to authors (“anonymous”) and year of publishing (“undated”) are made if these materials are cited by other researchers as main topics of reading for Katuic.

2 See the document “Bibliographic standards for linguistic research” by Wendy Smith (2009) for details on the formats in use (<http://li.payap.ac.th/images/stories/survey/Bibliographic%20Standards.pdf>).

Bibliography

1 Overview

References in this section have a broad scope in their focus of discussion, looking at Mon-Khmer or Austroasiatic languages on a whole, and not just Katuic. Some references are introductory overviews about Mon-Khmer or Austroasiatic languages. Others are edited books or collections of journal articles about Mon-Khmer language studies, which contain some discussion about Katuic languages among others. Bibliography-type references are also included in this category.

2 Mon-Khmer and Austroasiatic language studies

References in this section refer to linguistic studies about Mon-Khmer or Austroasiatic. Invariably, they contain some references to Katuic languages, usually in terms of the lexical data that is being used in the author's analysis or research. The materials here cover a wide spectrum of topics such as: lexical studies, linguistic comparisons, ethnolinguistics, language maintenance, and language change.

13 Others

References in this section could not be categorized into any of the earlier sections. Some references are about linguistic research according to geography. Some references focus on non-Austroasiatic language families, but refer to some elements from Mon-Khmer (and possibly Katuic) languages. Other references deal with research methods or language theories, citing Mon-Khmer/Katuic as examples or case studies.
